#TIBET MATTERS

@Gurdyal22:

#Uyghur #Tibet #Taiwan #LAC
#TiananmenSquareMassacre #corona
#Jackma besides killing of its own citizens are the trademark of #China. Time has come for the world to oppose and confront China.

@kapkobekhabib:

This is most shameful #Olympics2022 since Berlin 1936. Germany was murdering #Jews,
Polish etc in camps and now #China murdering #Uyghur #Muslims in #Xinjiang in concentration camps. #BoycottBeijingOlympics

@Russianmindset:

And while the Beijing Olympics are being broadcast around the world let us not forget TIBET. There is and will be a tendency for us to forget as the media is full of Russian threat to Ukraine..Remember TIBET!

DID YOU KNOW?

Thonmi Sambhota is traditionally regarded as the inventor of the Tibetan script and author of the Sum cu pa and Rtags kyi 'jug pa in the 7th century AD. Thonmi Sambhota is not mentioned in any of the Old Tibetan Annals or other ancient texts, although the Annals does mention writing shortly after 650. The two treaties attributed to him must postdate the 13th century.

"According to Tibetan tradition, Songtsen Gampo sent a young man of the Thonmi Sambhota son of Anu (or Drithorek Anu) to India in 632 with other youths, to learn the alphabet. The pattern chosen was the script of Kashmir. At all events, the ancient annals of Tun-huang record against the year 655 that 'the text of the laws was written'. It is staggering to realize that, in a couple of decades, not only was the Tibetan alphabet invented, but the script had been adapted to the Tibetan language by a highly complicated orthography, and used for the writing of documents. Thonmi is also said to have composed, no doubt later on, a very learned grammar on the Indian pattern."
